Henry J. Malsberger, of Atlanta, general manager of the SPCA, said the industry in Virginia gave nearly a third of these trees, 6,397,000, to private landowners in the state, he said.

COLONIAL PERIOD EDUCATION IS DISCUSSED HERE

Farmville, Va.- Education in Virginia and the South during the Colonial period and the 19th and 20th centuries was discussed here by by three college professors at the Institute of Southern Culture at Longwood College.

Possibly Virginia's greatest contribution to the 19th century American civilization was "the development of a democracy ennobled by aristocratic leadership," a Longwood College history professor told the evening audience.

"American history of the Revolution and early National periods abundantly demonstrates that a large and successful process of (informal) education had been in progress in Virginia," and it is called "Colonial Period," Dr. C. G. Gordon Moss said. "The results are obvious, but the educational system producing them is possibly not so well known and understood."

The fundamental training in the political science was the exercise of voting for members of the House of Burgesses. The second step was jury service and the third, militia service. The formal reality of political science was gained in office holding. This could be service on the vestry of the parish church or the ultimate of self government for Virginians, election to the Burgesses. In office holding, the capstone of the informal educational contributions of Virginians to political science was becoming a member of the Governor's Council, Dr. Moss stated.

"In sum total the result o f this political education system was the power of statesmanship which had tremendous flowering in the Revolutionary - early National generations," he concluded.

1958 Farm Fire Loss

Farm fires in this country in 1958 destroyed about $156,000,000 worth of livestock, machinery, and crops and buildings.

This was $4,000,000 more than in 1957 and continued an upward trend started in 1940.

A factor in the rise has been the increasing cost of replacing farm items destroyed by fire, economists of the Department of Agriculture have reported.

PIN MONEY

Edinburg, Texas.- "There is no legacy like honesty," said a sign on the bulletin board of Pan American College, and under it were tacked dollar bills. A student needing a small loan could take a bill or two, with the understanding it would be repaid as soon as possible.

It all worked fine, officials said, until four non - student juveniles dropped in. They cleaned off the board — $27 worth — with no plans for repayment.

Juvenile officers picked up the quartet and turned them over to their parents. Police didn't say how much money was recovered.
